Christian Crosby Powerful report of environmental movement's beginnings into litigation and science for clean water and air. John Adams built and ran NRDC longer than any other environmental leader. He has been an individual force as well as NRDC has been an organizational force. Definitely worth reading to learn how NRDC has become the strongest and most effective conservation leader in the world. Gives us hope that we can leave the campsite better for our kids and grandkids than we found it. Climate Change is our big test to shift from fossil fuels to renewable energies for a sustainable and prosperous economy and lifestyle before the tipping points become irreversible. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. " Great input from his wife By Lynn Sullivan Well written book about environmental law and the evolution of the environmental movement in the united States by Presidential Medal of Freedom author. National Resources Defense Council founder and lawyer dubbed "if the Earth had a lawyer, it would be John Adams." Great input from his wife, Patricia Adams. With every great and successful man is an even greater and successful woman. 0 of 4 people found the following review helpful. Not easy or interesting reading By gejomel'm not sure what I expected in buying this book but its O.K. but not an easy read. Would I buy it again, Probably not ?

The world's preeminent environmental organization began with a layer of soot on the windowsill of a Greenwich Village apartment. Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) founder John H. Adams, a pioneer of environmental action, was working as a lawyer for the U.S. Attorney's office when he and fellow lawyers teamed up to form a grassroots environmental advocacy group. Since 1970, NRDC has grown into an international powerhouse with 1.2 million members and a staff of scientists and lawyers whose mission is to safeguard the planet. This inspiring memoir tells the story of the NRDC and the environmental movement it sparked.

From Booklist *Starred * Forty years ago, John Adams, an ardent litigator, joined forces with a band of innovative Yale law students, including the now-renowned environmentalist James Gustave Speth, to create the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC), a "public interest law firm dedicated to protecting the environment." Setting a course for "responsible militancy," Adams took the helm, and while the rest should be history, the full and remarkably instructive story of the NRDC's ingenuity, perseverance, and landmark triumphs has not previously been told. Assisted by coauthors Patricia Adams and George Black, editor of OnEarth, John Adams energetically pilots a page-turning insider's chronicle of the groundbreaking watchdog group's key battles, bold moves, and hard lessons. Early on, the NRDC discovered just how effective governmental regulation can be as it fought "with law and science" to defend diverse communities and ecosystems against chemical pollution, strip-mining, clear-cutting, nuclear waste, misuse of public lands, coastal oil drilling, and other threats. Generously supported by influential philanthropists, including Robert Redford, who provides the book's foreword, the indefatigable, consensus-seeking NRDC relies on one crucial natural resource, the voice of the public, to support its ambitious global efforts to preserve "clean air, clean water, wild places, wild creatures." Invaluable firsthand environmental history and a blueprint for future conservation efforts. --Donna Seaman " ...Inspiring. The characters you find in John and Patricia Adams' book are bright, hard-nosed exemplars of the sort of fixers it will take to actually save the planet. They might just inspire you to go into debt, get a law degree, and sue some bastards." - Outside magazine "Invaluable firsthand environmental history and a blueprint for future conservation efforts" - Booklist (starred review) "...a fast-paced, highly readable tour de force" - Treehugger.com About the Author John H. Adams was NRDC's executive director and, later, president from 1970 until 2006. He served on President Clinton's Council for Sustainable Development, and sits on the boards of numerous environmental organizations, including NRDC. He lives in New York. Patricia Adams is a long-time supporter of NRDC and a steering committee member of NRDC's Partnership for the Earth campaign.
